

Example of introducing and integrating a passage:

Max is learning that he is important to Liesel even though he has been made to feel worthless by his society. Liesel, through her interaction with the Jewish man, helps Max regain his sense of self-worth.

An example of Max's knowledge of his own value to Liesel occurs when he wakes up after being unconscious. After talking about the presents she brought to him, "He sat up a little higher and paused for a dozen silent sentences. Trepidation found its way onto his face and he made a confession to the girl," admitting to her he was afraid to fall asleep again (334).

Introduction of passage with context

Integration of the passage within a sentence

Example of introducing and integrating a passage:

Max is learning that he is important to Liesel even though he has been made to feel worthless by his society. Liesel, through her interaction with the Jewish man, helps Max regain his sense of self-worth.

An example of Max's knowledge of his own value to Liesel occurs when he wakes up after being unconscious. After talking about the presents she brought to him, "He sat up a little higher and paused for a dozen silent sentences. Trepidation found its way onto his face and he made a confession to the girl," admitting to her he was afraid to fall asleep again (334).

Introduction of passage with context

Integration of the passage within a sentence

Example of introducing and integrating a passage:

Max is learning that he is important to Liesel even though he has been made to feel worthless by his society. Liesel, through her interaction with the Jewish man, helps Max regain his sense of self-worth.

An example of Max's knowledge of his own value to Liesel occurs when he wakes up after being unconscious. After talking about the presents she brought to him, "He sat up a little higher and paused for a dozen silent sentences. Trepidation found its way onto his face and he made a confession to the girl," admitting to her he was afraid to fall asleep again (334).

Introduction of passage with context

Integration of the passage within a sentence